BUILDING HEALTHY RELATIONSHIPS

Relationships are a necessary component of living one's best life. They are needed to create deep bonds, for companionship, and to provide the emotional support needed to thrive post-rehab. Relationships are effective in helping people in recovery, stay healthy and increase their wellbeing.

GOAL SETTING

Recovery goals are objectives that a person sets that are related directly to their recovery (Mental health-based goals), and they may have been put on pause due to their mental health condition (work, family, physical health, social life etc.) Recovery is not one size fits all. In this class we'll discover our deeper wishes for ourselves, begin to break down obstacles in the way of our plans, and understand that setbacks don't have to stop us from working towards our hopes for ourselves.

STOP THE MADNESS

Are you angry at everyone and everything all the time? Do you feel like there's a volcano inside you waiting to erupt? Learn healthy ways to deal with your anger.

RIDING THE STORMS

As a support group that focuses on when life has its tricks and turns. Riding the storm is to help individuals reach their personal goals, such as living independently, going to school, getting a job, having friends, and enjoying life in the community, and advancing in their recovery. Each group is individualized and self-directed activities and curricula are created by the facilitators and group members. While some groups direct conversations on specific recovery-based discussions, others focus on physical wellness and its connection to mental wellness, building socialization skills, and the exploration of varying coping methods ranging from arts and music to writing and much, much more.

8 DIMENSIONS OF WELLNESS

How you are doing in each dimension of your life determines your wellness! The eight dimensions of wellness in recovery are emotional, environmental, financial, intellectual, occupational, physical, social, and spiritual; combine these dimensions and create your balance in recovery.
